

Sherry Rais

Co-Founder and CEO
Enthea
Boston, Massachusetts

Sherry Rais is a prominent mental health advocate and the CEO and co-founder of Enthea, a company dedicated to facilitating safe and affordable access to innovative behavioral health treatments like ketamine-assisted therapy. With over a decade of consulting experience at the United Nations and the World Bank, Sherry has played a pivotal role in implementing poverty reduction programs across more than 35 countries, deeply understanding the interplay between mental health and economic stability. As a female minority founder, Sherry is at the forefront of integrating advanced therapies into mainstream mental health care, championing their superior efficacy over traditional treatments. Sherry also holds leadership roles as the executive director of the Psychedelic Research Group and a senior consultant to the California Institute of Integral Studies (CIIS), applying her expertise to drive mental health advancements. Sherry holds a bachelor's degree in psychology and international development from McGill University and a master's degree in public policy and management from the London School of Economics. In 2021, she completed the Certificate in Psychedelic Therapies and Research from CIIS. Her work is crucial in shaping policies for employers, health plans and unions, pushing for health benefits that not only enhance mental health outcomes but also improve overall organizational productivity and well-being.
